

Call for contributions – I, Scientist Conference on gender, career paths & networking

16th-19th September 2020, Virtual Conference

I, Scientist aims to address the still persisting gender-related obstacles based on structural problems of the academic and scientific system and provide an opportunity to openly address these problems, to discuss potential solutions and form alliances. Additionally, we aim to increase the visibility of minorities in science and provide an opportunity for the exchange of experiences and ideas, networking, and encouragement.

The conference is organized by and for students and early career scientists and we are expecting about 300 participants.

I, Scientist will feature talks by established scientists as well as early career researchers, representatives from industry and other non-academic positions, who will share stories about their personal life and career paths, obstacles they faced, and how they overcame them.

We are looking for contributions to the following topics of our conference:

- Race in science and academia
- LGBTQIA+ in science and academia
- COVID's impact on gender equality and leadership
- Social entrepreneurship and leadership
- Family and academia

Would you like to share your story in one of these sessions? Would you like to present your research on one of these topics? Then please send us a short description of yourself and what you are planning to present (max. 300 words) via email to conference2020@iscientist.de by the 31st of August 2020.

Talks may address personal experiences, research results, or any aspect you feel is relevant and important to share with students and scientists. All sessions will be plenary sessions and include 2-3 invited talks each. Talks are scheduled to take 15 min each plus a moderated discussion with the speaker at the end of each session.
